With pandemic changing lives as we knew it, it was challenging for ArtSparks Foundation to ensure engagement with all our students. After continuous efforts and taking necessary safety protocols, students were provided with art kits that they could work with from their homes. During this time, our facilitators were in continuous liaison with students and their families to provide support.

V, an 8th grade student at MARP Adugodi, during in-person classes he was a silent observer and had minimal interactions with facilitators. This year with the activities being done remotely he started interacting better with the facilitators over phone.

His mother was able to contribute to his learning by helping him understand the activity plan better. Now if he has any queries, without any hesitation, he calls the facilitators and gets them clarified. With his improved communications he has started independently working on projects with much more attention to details.
